

After the scene has cleared, use your professional judgement to read the situation and mood of the class, including your own emotions, about whether you should continue the class, process the event together, or give students instructions about what to do instead of resuming the lesson. It is always appropriate, if you so choose, to pray for the student and for the emergency and medical personnel. Feel free to assure other students that we only call an ambulance because none of us have the medical training to know exactly how to care for a student's health. If the student is transported to the hospital, most of the time it is done as a precaution, not because there is likely to be any immediate danger to the student's life or well-being.

If other students are more than usually upset, there is care available through OnSite, Timely Care, or the Office of Spiritual Formation. The switchboard phone number 559-453-2000 will get the student connected to the appropriate office for information. If you or another employee needs aftercare, click this link to get information about the Employee Assistance Program: Employee Benefits, or ask the switchboard operator to connect you to Human Resources.
